Photograph 1. Baxter Iron Mine, San Bernardino County

The Baxter (Cave Mountain) Iron mine is located about 40 miles east of Barstow, just north of the Mojave River wash. The deposit has been mined intermittently since World War II, and the current operator, CAL-MAT Land Company, uses iron ore from the Baxter mine to manufacture portland cement. Like many intermittently active quarries and pits in the Mojave Desert, the Baxter deposit is drilled, blasted, and mined during the winter. Ore is loaded and transported from large stockpiles only when needed for cement production. The tractor-trailer rig shown in the above photograph is being loaded by the driver, who will haul the iron ore to CALMAT's Tehachapi cement plant. Photograph by J.S. Rapp

PREFACE

Mines and Mineral Producers Active in California (1988-1989) contains the names, addresses, commodities, and locations of 1012 mines believed to have produced mineral commodities in California during 1988-89. A broad variety of mineral recovery operations is included in this list, including: rock quarries, open pits, underground mines, gravel-bar excavations, and various types of dredges. A mine is listed as active if it produced at any time during the two-year period from January 1988 to December 1989.

Mine data in Mines and Mineral Producers Active in California (1988-1989) are presented in three sections which are sorted by (1) county, (2) mineral commodity, and (3) company name. New features of the revised List include section/township/range data where available, and a 1:1,000,000 scale map of California that shows the locations and commodities of the active mines listed in the text. Latitude and Longitude locations are listed for each property.

With nearly $3,000,000,000 in annual mineral production, California has a very large and diverse mining industry. In addition to the active mines listed in this publication, California has several dozen government borrow pits and several thousand idle or abandoned mines and prospects. Of the 1012 active mines in this list, 668 are construction aggregate operations, 263 are industrial mineral mines, and 81 are metal mines. These mines are distributed throughout California, although much of the State's construction aggregate and industrial mineral production has historically come from southern California.

The list was generated from a Division of Mines and Geology (DMG) computer database and indexing system entitled "MINEFILE". MINEFILE was created in 1977 and significantly expanded in 1989 because of a State Mining and Geology Board (Board) and California Department of Conservation (DOC) directive for the DMG to compile data on mining operations that are subject to the Surface Mining and Reclamation Act of 1975 (SMARA). SMARA requires California surface mines to have approved reclamation plans. The Board and DOC wanted reliable documentation on mining industry and lead agency compliance with SMARA reclamation guidelines.

To expand and revise the DMG mineral property database (MINEFILE), DMG staff visited most of the State's lead agencies and examined their mine permit files. Mine location and activity status data were also gathered from the U.S. Bureau of Mines (USBM), Mine Safety and Health Administration (MSHA), Forest Service (USFS), and the Bureau of Land Management (BLM). Dozens of mine sites were examined by DMG staff to resolve questions that were raised, and all the new information was merged into DMG's MINEFILE. A subset of MINEFILE, entitled MOSSFILE, became the focal point of important discussions between California's lead agencies, representatives of the mining industry, and the State, on the topic of mined land reclamation.

MOSSFILE as originally compiled contained several records with incomplete and erroneous data due to the nature of federal, State, and lead agency procedures and filing systems. In an attempt to reduce the number of errors, copies of MOSSFILE were sent to appropriate lead agencies for review and correction. A preliminary file was also given to the California Mining Association (CMA) for correction. The CMA then sent letters to lead agencies and mining companies requesting clarification and correction of questionable mine data.

A list of active mineral producers is generated biennially from MINEFILE, and these lists are used extensively by industry and government. Approximately 1000 copies are sold each year, and an additional 500 reference copies are sent to libraries and government agencies. Unlike the 1986 list, the current list contains no data on the number of mine employees, the status of use permits, or the status of mined land reclamation plans. However, this transient information is contained in MINEFILE, updated monthly, and can be obtained upon request to DMG. The most current permit information must be obtained directly from the lead agencies, and there are 108 lead agencies in California, not counting federal agencies. The DMG must rely upon these agencies for updated information on activity status, use permits, and reclamation plans. Currently, there is no one place in California to go for up-to-date and accurate use permit and reclamation information.

It is possible that some active mines have been inadvertently excluded from the revised active mine list. Reasons for possible omissions include: 1) the mining operation may be so small that the SMARA does not apply, 2) the mine operator may not have filed a plan of operations with a lead agency or the federal government, 3) the information may not have been readily available to the DMG.

The DMG uses personal computers and common software to track, manipulate, and index mineral property data. Some of California's lead agencies have already designed and developed PC-based mine data systems to identify and monitor mining activity in their jurisdictions. The DMG is assisting James Ridenour (USBM, Spokane) in revising the Bureau's extensive Mineral Industry Location System (MILS). As a result of these concerted database projects, the DMG will be able to provide mineral property information more rapidly in the future.

Mines and Mineral Producers Active in California (1988-1989) was prepared by staff of the Division's Mineral Resource Analysis unit, with assistance from: J.G. Scarborough, P. Craw, R. Miller, L. Jensen, and other DMG staff. If you have corrections or additions for MINEFILE, please complete the DMG Mineral Property Report form at the back of this report, or telephone us directly at:

The Dunn Siding Mill is about 30 miles east of Barstow on the Union Pacific Railroad. The mill has been an important processing and shipping facility for borates, talc, and other industrial minerals for nearly 50 years. The current operator, American Borate Company, processes its Death Valley borate at this plant, and also does custom grinding for independent industrial mineral mining companies. Custom mills are as important to independent mineral producers as cooperative grain mills are to independent wheat farmers.

Photograph 3. Randsburg Quarry, Kern County

The Randsburg Quarry is near the historic mining town of Randsburg (Johannesburg), about 40 miles northeast of Mojave on U.S. Highway 395. Gray schistose metamorphic rock is quarried here for use as decorative flagstone. Flagstone and crushed decorative rock products have become important mineral commodities in California. Flagstone is often transported hundreds of miles and sells for as much as $200 per ton. The worker shown above will place these recently quarried rock slabs on wooden pallets. The pallets of rock will then be hauled to urban areas for use in building construction and landscaping. California has dozens of small decorative rock quarries, and many of these are in the Mojave Desert. Brightly colored, crushed, and screened volcanic, carbonate, and granitic rock products from these small quarries are used throughout the State. Photograph by J. S Rapp

Photograph 4. Mesquite Mine, Imperial County

The Mesquite Mine is adjacent to the southernmost part of the Chocolate Mountains. Gold was discovered and mined in this desert region during the 1800s and early 1900s. In about 1980, Gold Fields Mining Corporation began a concerted exploration and development program at Mesquite, which has made the Mesquite mine one of California's largest gold producers. The Mesquite deposit is structurally controlled and appears to have formed at a relatively shallow depth from ascending mineralized solutions. Shown in this photograph is blasting at Mesquite's Vista Pit. Important gold deposits, geologically similar to Mesquite, have been discovered and developed in several other areas of the southwestern United States.

Photograph 5. Arthur R. Wilson Quarry, San Benito County

The Granite Rock Company's Arthur R. Wilson Quarry, formerly known as the Logan Quarry, is in the Santa Cruz Mountains about 7 miles east of Watsonville. It is reportedly the largest stone quarry west of Texas, and for nearly a hundred years it has been producing crushed stone aggregate materials for the San Francisco Bay region. The 760-ton mobile crushing plant shown above can be operated by one person and is capable of moving at 38 feet per minute. The Wilson Quarry is bounded on the northeast by the San Andreas fault zone, which has broken the plutonic country rock such that blasting is not routinely required.
